Semester Description:

This course is designed to train students in research methods used in studying African history, society, and culture. It is intended to give students practical experience with challenges they will face designing and conducting effective research in Africa. In addition to reading books and articles that employ different methods, students will gain experience working with a range of sources: archival, oral, ethnographic, and photographic.

Required Textbooks, Articles, and Resources:

Readings may include the following:

2. White, Comforts of Home.
7. Marks, Not Either an Experimental Doll.
10. Berry, Fathers Work for their Sons.

Grading:

In addition to doing the readings and making a number of oral presentations, each student will be expected to write a major research design in the course. If students have chosen dissertation topics, they will be encouraged to write proposals related to them.
